Collide to establish Global Scholarship Fund for 100 lucky students worldwide

CEO Bruce Spencer announced today that his company is in the final stages of negotiations with representatives from the United Nations about the establishment of a student scholarship program for disadvantaged students from around the world.

The program, which will pay for a student's travel, accommodations, meals and tuition, will pave the way for a hundred students to attend a post secondary institution either in their own country or abroad.

Students will receive a scholarship to attend a two to four year program of their choice in any one of some three hundred and fifty previously identified colleges wishing to support the program.

All the details, such as information about the funding for the program and the student selection process, will be unveiled at a press conference early in the new year.

Collide expected to hire translators to meet growing demand from around the world.

Collide is expected to announce the opening of its first satellite office outside of Canada as early as next summer. This is in reaction to the overwhelming response the website has had outside of the two languages it already hosts, which is English and French.

Public Affairs representative Daniel Smith called in the media to respond to the rumors being circulated about some of the possible locations for the expected expansion. Smith told reporters that they had narrowed the selection down to three locations, one in Asia and the other two somewhere in Europe.

Smith would not confirm or deny that among the forerunners were London, England and Pune, India. He also ruled out any possibility of a satellite office south of the border saying that any expansion plans for the North American market would remain in Canada.
