

Zoe (as moss campion): So, I'm a moss campion. I'm a quintessential, crucial arctic plant. I form this beautiful, green, dense hemisphere of leaves in the spring. And then soon afterwards, because the growing season is very short, I have to get going pretty quickly. I produce these beautiful bright pink flowers. My flowers smell of honey, so I attract the insects, and then I have to rapidly get fertilized and get my seeds fertilized, and get the seeds to grow because the season is very short, so I don't have very long to do my thing in. My day really never ends because we have 24-hour sunlight so I can photosynthesize all day and all night. Although the light in the evening is a little bit more muted and not as strong as during the day, so I can probably photosynthesize a bit more during the day than at night. By the way, it's great for taking photographs of me overnight, so if you come see me at midnight, you'll get your best photo.
