

THE LEGAL SCHOLAR COLLOQUIUM:

Clinical Law Teaching

What and How

A lunchtime discussion with Professor Barkaskas and Professor Barrett on how they came to create and lead legal clinics at Allard Law, and how future lawyers can contribute to and develop clinical law teaching and services. If you think you might want to pursue access to justice through a legal clinic in the future, come along to this session chaired by Charis Liu and Lucy Bogle to hear, discuss and ask questions.

Professor Patricia M. Barkaskas, Associate Professor of Teaching, is the Academic Director of Allard Law's Indigenous Community Legal Clinic, the Academic Director of Indigenous Legal Studies, and the faculty lead for the law school's Indigenous Cultural Competency Certificate. Her research focuses on the intersection of justice and law, including access to justice, clinical legal education, and decolonizing and Indigenizing law. She is particularly interested in examining the value of Indigenous pedagogies in experiential learning, clinical legal education, and skills-based legal training, and disrupting the normative violence of colonial legal education.

Professor Nicole Barrett, Assistant Professor of Teaching, is the Director of Allard Law's International Justice and Human Rights Clinic. Professor Barrett and the IJHR Clinic work with international courts and tribunals, a wide range of international and domestic non-governmental organizations, and provide human rights law and policy advice to governments. Her research interests include human rights, international criminal law, corruption, and human trafficking, on which she has widely published, presented and testified.
