Dear Mrs. Garett,

Does your company need a hungry, attentive, hard-working, and responsive developer who is keen to learn, and provide value to your company? If so, you should consider me for your Software developer Engineer II job. As a recent graduate from UBC, I believe my projects, diversity in skills, dev-marketing, and technical communication, makes me a very consumer-oriented developer. This makes it relatively easy for me to work with focus groups and bring in the needs of various departments into my programming methodology.

My data-visualization work for the Terrorism project, allowed me to look at various ways of presenting data and extracting the most valuable information for a dataset. Most large companies usually have an abundance of data on the consumer, which they need to present to the user, other businesses, and each other. My ability to extract and present data to the user is a valuable tool for a consumer-base demanding more data.

Through my back-end work for my software engineering course, I developed an understanding of Scrum development methodology, behavioral-driven development, and Typescript. I am in a good position to understand a consumer-facing methodology.

Through my database work for my capstone, I developed an understanding of a Waterfall and Scrum development methodology. I learned that I had to at times do a tradeoff with technology.

My resume will show I fulfill all the requirements for the job. I am eager to discuss working opportunities with you. I can be reached at siddhero97@gmail.com.

Sincerely,

Siddhartha
