A DOCUMENTARY FILM

by Travis Rummel and Ben Knight

At the headwaters of Bristol Bay, mining companies have proposed to extract what may prove to be the richest deposit of gold and copper in the world. Red Gold documents the tension between mine officials—who say they will build a “clean” mine that will leave the salmon’s habitat untouched—and local fishermen who oppose the mine. This film goes beyond the conflict, offering a portrait of a unique way of life that wouldn’t exist if the salmon don’t return to Bristol Bay.
