The Presentation House Gallery is located in North Vancouver and for the past three decades, it has had over 300 exhibitions of photographic art including local and international artists, work from North Van students in the Chester Fields program and major artists such as Stan Douglas, Ansel Adams and Andy Warhol. Their mandate is to “exhibit and disseminate photography and media art, emphasizing contemporary Canadian work within a context of historical and international art”. They give tours for their exhibitions and they have a publishing program as well as a bookshop that is dedicated to books about photography, film and video.

Their exhibitions are free but donations are welcomed, and submissions are also welcomed however their exhibitions are not programmed through submissions. They are very involved with the community as they offer public event and art education programs for the community to really allow for people from all walks of life to experience and visit the gallery space. They also organize national and international tours of exhibitions as well as produce publications.
